

Corporate Beneficial Ownership Registry 2.0?

June 2023

Private federal corporations governed by the Canada Business Corporations Act (“CBCA”) are currently required to prepare and maintain a register of “individuals with significant control” (see our previous article regarding the specific requirements). This requirement was implemented in 2022 with the aim of targeting money laundering, tax evasion, and to increase corporate transparency and accountability. In an effort to further enhance transparency and combat illicit activities, the Government of Canada recently proposed legislation that would require CBCA corporations to report beneficial ownership information to the government and make such information available to the public. This would represent a significant step forward as federal corporations are currently only required to disclose beneficial ownership information if requested by an investigative body.

While many companies expanding into Canada are opting for a provincial incorporation, and therefore would not be affected by the proposed legislation, an increasing number of provincial corporate statutes have introduced the requirement to maintain a beneficial ownership register. For example, Ontario corporations are now required (as of January 1, 2023) to maintain a register of “individuals with significant control” (see our previous article), which is currently only required to be disclosed to tax and compliance authorities and law enforcement at their request.

Quebec is currently the only Canadian jurisdiction that requires public disclosure of beneficial ownership information. It remains to be seen whether the proposed federal legislation will be enacted and whether other provincial governments will adopt a similar approach.

Aird & Berlis will continue to monitor any further developments. If you have any questions relating to the proposed legislation, or if you require assistance with creating a beneficial ownership register, we encourage you to reach out to your regular contacts at Aird & Berlis or to the authors of this article.
